

Suddenly, the door of the office opens. A man comes into the office. He has some big boxes.

"Here are your 10,000 pens," he says. "Who is paying me?"

"There was a sale on pens," Meir tells the boss. "Only $50 for 500 pens, so I asked for 10,000 pens. Can you please pay the man for the pens?"

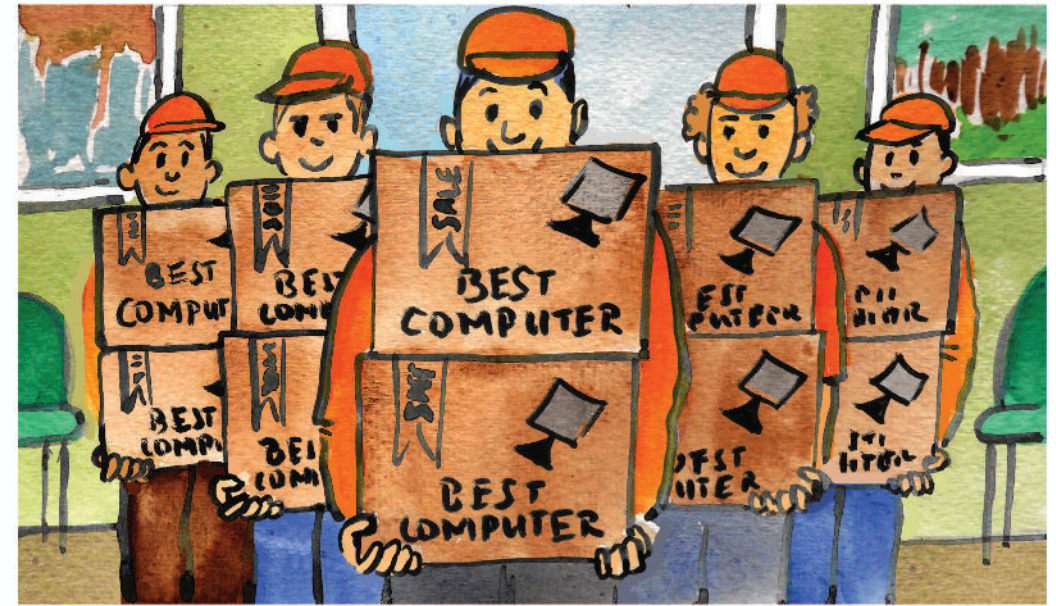

The boss and Meir's mother look at Meir. "You bought 10,000 pens for my office?" the boss asks.

"Meir, what did you do?" his mother says. "I can't believe that you bought 10,000 pens!"

"Offices need pens," Meir says, "and there was a special sale on pens."

"Our office does not need 10,000 pens," the boss shouts.

"Need 10,000 pens! Need 10,000 pens!" Polly says.

The door of the office opens again. Five men come into the office. They have ten big boxes.

"Here are your ten computers," one man says. "Who is paying me?"

"There was a sale on computers," Meir tells the boss. "Two computers for the price of one, so I asked for ten computers. Can you please pay the man for the computers?"

The boss and Meir's mother look at Meir. "You bought ten computers for my office?" the boss asks.

"Meir, what did you do?" his mother says. "I can't believe that you bought ten computers!"

"Offices need computers," Meir says, "and there was a special sale on computers."

"Our office does not need ten new computers," the boss shouts.

"New computers! New computers!" Polly says.
