

The lesson continued peacefully until about fifteen minutes before recess. Then Dina, who had been feeling sorry for herself the whole lesson, forgot where she was and took out her sandwich.

She had just taken a bite when Mrs. Davis stopped teaching, stared at her and said, "Dina! Please leave the classroom with your sandwich and go to the principal. Tell her what you were doing in middle of the lesson!"

Dina stood up. Slowly, she walked to the principal's office. School was just not for her. All she knew how to do was make everyone angry at her. As she walked into the office, she had an idea. She would stop going to school! That way she could help more at home and maybe even earn some money. Yes! From tomorrow, that's what she would do.
